Dr Ashley delivered a fabulous keynote for our International Women's Day lunch on Big Leadership. Her enthusiasm on the subject inspired loads of discussion amongst the attendees about the leadership actions required to achieve gender equality within the accounting profession. Dr Ashley was the perfect choice of speaker for our event, I cannot recommend her highly enough.

“ If you are someone who is feeling battle weary, this is a MUST READ.

Many Leaders are dealing with a depleted surge capacity from the pandemic.(Seriously this section of the book is a total game changer!) Leadership is a marathon, there are years of transformation ahead of you. Transformation takes time.

“ With more than half of employees wanting to work remotely at least 50% of the time, and more than 75% of departments expected to have some or all of their team working remotely within the next few years, online is a significant feature of the world of work. Leveraging online is strategically significant, and likely mission critical, for creating sustainable and relevant organisations.

“ I really like how you intertwine emotion with direction, it means a lot to me to hear a leader say that, I don't believe it is referenced enough in the workplace.

“ The BEING of leadership is never spoken about!

Thank you for writing on this! First Lead Yourself is a brilliant book that actually addresses the BEING and embodiment of leadership. This topic is so often missed in leadership books. I am so glad Stacey wrote this book because it has really uplevelled my leadership ability.

“ There's always a temptation to think that having been performing leadership roles for a reasonable period that a book for the 'New Leader' is perhaps not a natural choice.

I would challenge that even a CEO with a career's worth of leadership under their belt wouldn't gain a few great reminders, tips and actions from this straight-forward, succinct and easy-to-read book.

Do you enjoy working in a job where you are inspired to do your best every day? It is your preference to be treated as a big and not as a person with enormous potential? If a leader took the time to coach you to be a better leader, would that be meaningful to you?

In today's episode of "Why It Works," Stacey Ashley reveals some of the hidden mechanisms behind why Leaders Create Leaders works. We explore the importance of holding space for people to learn, how one coaching leader is key, and how to motivate future leaders.

Dr Stacey Ashley, Ashley Coaching

Dr Stacey Ashley is a big voice for developing leadership in organizations across the globe. Her work in 2022 was pivotal in winning many prestigious business awards. Stacey said she was surprised by how many people are delighted to see her recognized for her work and the difference she makes.

"They want to know everything about the awards, how you enter, how they are judged, what it was like to be at the gala dinner and awards event. Then they share how thrilled they are for me," she said.

"I love to see how much joy my team gets from our awards. Yes, I'm the one standing out front, and they have put in the huge efforts that often go unnoticed by others. Our awards are a recognition of all they do to make our contribution matter."

Stacey's style and experience was a really good fit for our organisation. A full day of workshops, conversations, and activity with Stacey inspired our female leaders to reach their full potential.

Working with Stacey has also helped identify some of the challenges our women are facing, providing the opportunity for us to be more informed and proactive so we can support women in our organisation in an even better way.

We all know how instrumental an MC is in a world-class conference, and it's a world-class international coaching conference. As chair for APAC2022 which was held virtually on December 9-10, I felt privileged and lucky in choosing Stacey as our MC, and she performed her role extraordinarily well - natural, calm, prepared, controlled, pointed, and exhibiting a profound self-confidence. With her indispensable contribution, the conference has been hailed as a sweeping success.

Thank you Stacey for helping make the event tick and for our great partnership!

Stacey supported our planning in the lead up to the workshop and was in regular communication to ensure we were all on the same page.

She tailored the program to support our specific needs and the topics she covered were relevant to the current climate many leaders are working in. Our group left armed with tangible actions we could implement in both our work life and personal life. It has changed the way we work and think.
